Dear Ms. Henney:

I am urging the FDA to act on the Humane Farming Association's petition to put an end to the practice of feeding the carcasses of animals dying of various diseases to other farm animals.

Feeding carcasses of dead animals to herbivorous animals is monstrous in itself; feeding the carcasses of animals that have died of diseases to animals destined for human consumption places the consumers at risk. Mad cow disease in animals and a new variant of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans are both attributable to this horrendous practice of forcing herbivorous animals to feed on dead carcasses, a thing they never do naturally.

I am looking forward to seeing what action FDA plans to take in this matter.

Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely yours,
